Wausau: Environmental Justice

Resolution in Support of Environmental Justice – COW Updates 9/8/2021

Drafted by Wausau City Council

WHEREAS, Wausau has affirmed our commitment to being a community for everyone in aspiration and in reality, including building an inclusive, and welcoming place to live, learn, work, and enjoy life; and

WHEREAS, we continue to rise to meet the challenges that misunderstandings about our diverse experiences may present. We seek to listen to understand each other. We aspire to learn from each other about our diverse experiences and barriers so we can empathetically and soundly inform our community's policies; and

WHEREAS, the City of Wausau is committed to engaging the community on policies that affect residents, citizens, workers, employers, and visitors; and

WHEREAS, the principles of environmental justice can help build public policy based on respect and equity for all people, free from discrimination or bias; and

WHEREAS, Environmental Justice is defined by the United States Environmental Protection Agency as the fair treatment and meaningful involvement of all people regardless of race, color, national origin, or income, with respect to the development, implementation, and enforcement of environmental laws, regulations, and policies; and Wisconsin Makes New Commitment to En...

Wisconsin Governor Tony Evers (center) meets with elected officials and advocates in Wausau, Wisconsin, about his plan to create a chief resilience officer position to lead state resilience planning. Pew's Zachary Bartscherer is among the attendees (second from right).

The Pew Charitable Trusts

Supporters of the statewide effort, many of whom were present at the meeting, included Wausau Mayor Katie Rosenberg, first responders, school board members, leaders of Tribal communities, members of the Hmong community, rural and urban voices, and representatives from across the political spectrum.

The flood concerns that attendees shared were as diverse as the people at the table. Flooding affects all sectors of Wisconsin society and industry, from agriculture and transportation to schools, housing, and banking. And it requires resources and responses from myriad state agencies and programs, including the departments of natural resources, housing and urban development, and tourism.

The day before the announcement, Gov. Evers met with Pew and a group of local elected leaders and advocates in Wausau, Wisconsin, to discuss the need for a state resilience plan. Some of the attendees had been vocal in the media, asking the governor to commit to resilience planning, which followed Pew's 2020 testimony before the Governor's Task Force on Climate Change

April 22, 2022: Executive Order #161

“And far too often, communities of color and low-income communities are forced to live, work, and play near sources of pollution, leading to poor health outcomes. We cannot ignore the role that environmental justice plays in building a state where every family in every zip code can be successful.”
